Brandon Griffith is a Member in Miller Johnson's Intellectual Property practice group, focusing on representing clients in business-critical protection, ownership, and enforcement of their intellectual property rights.

Intellectual Property

Mr. Griffith counsels companies in the complexities of managing their business and IP strategy, from preparing and prosecuting domestic and foreign patent applications, to advising clients in the transactional context of developing, using and owning technology and intellectual property in their relationships with third parties (e.g., licensing agreements, development agreements, service agreements, supply agreements, merger and acquisition transactions, etc.). Clients appreciate his ability to distill a complex legal issue down to its essential parts and convey that information in an organized, easily-understood manner.

Mr. Griffith provides technical experience to defend our clients' IP interests through:

- Devising strategies for protecting and developing intellectual property assets
